

Are you a Teacher or Homeschool Parent?

Do you know a Teacher?

Would you like to help provide financial education training to our youth?

Life has become very complicated and hectic, and requires decisions every day: where to buy gas, how much to put in the savings account, how much money to allocate for clothing and how much for meals out, which car to buy, where to invest for retirement, which cell phone and cable plans are best, and a myriad of others. Not knowing the answers to these questions, or not knowing where to find the answers, can be very stressful, and costly!

It's important that our kids learn about money and finances. As our next generation reaches adulthood in this ever-more hectic world, it's vital they're prepared to successfully answer life's complicated questions like these.

To help address this need, First Command Educational Foundation has developed Money Matters Online, a web-based financial literacy program for secondary-school age students. Its 12 modules address subjects such as Accounts, Credit, Loans, Insurance, Stocks & Investments, and other subjects vital for anyone to function successfully in our society.

If you or a teacher you know is interested in learning more about FCEF's Money Matters Online, please visit the Education Resources page of our website (www.fcef.com/education/education-resources-3/) and scroll down to the Money Matters Online section, or contact First Command Educational Foundation at 817-569-2732 or edufoundation@fcef.com.
